We do firmly believe a benefit of open access is the transparency in the cost of publishing, which enables authors to see up front what each journal charges and make an informed decision based on the service the journal offers.

Carrie Calder
Strategy Director, Nature Publishing Group

A laudable initiative

Quality Open Access Market – QOAM – welcomes any initiative that raises the awareness for the need of a well informed open access market. Thinkchecksubmit is such an initiative. Please have a close look.

Now you can contribute to materialize this market. It is based on academic crowd sourcing, independent of publishers. As a librarian you score the transparency of a journal’s website with respect to the editorial board, peer review, governance and workflow. As an author you share the reality by completing a 2 minute Valuation Score Card. QOAM covers the complete open access publishing scene, i.e. both OA and hybrid journals. It has comprehensive price information. Thus a genuine market comes into being, realised by and for academia.

Today QOAM has 2400+ scored journals and 16,000+ waiting to be scored. This is not enough for a well functioning open access market. So, spread the word. Without a market we may have open access, but at a price that even exceeds subscriptions.